FUNERAL OF MOTHER AND SON

Mrs. Edward L. Chappell Died Thursday Morning from Heart Trouble—Double Services at Trinity Methodist Church.

There was a double funeral at the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church on Thursday afternoon, instead of a single one as was expected. The arrangements had been perfected for the services for Edward Burnett Chappell, but on Thursday morning at 4:45 o'clock his mother, who has been ill for the past two months and since his death critically so, passed away, and it was decided to hold both funerals together, which was done.

The services were held at 2:30 o'clock at the church, both caskets resting before the pulpit, about which there were many floral tributes. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends, the senior class of the Free Academy attending in a body.

Rev. Dr. M. S. Kaufman conducted the service in an impressive manner, speaking as follows:

Edward Burnett Chappell was born in Norwich Town, Feb. 18, 1891, and died at his home on April 21, 1910, having lived only 19 years and two months. But in that brief period he had achieved a character of nobility and a most conspicuous place upon the honor roll of earth's noblest youth. It has been my privilege to know him somewhat intimately for several years, and I can say that he was a boy who so completely won my esteem and admiration. He seemed to possess all the essentials of a successful and honorable life. He was not a genius, unless we accept as an accurate definition of genius the unusual capacity for hard work. We do not claim for him superior intellectual gifts or such brilliancy of natural endowment as would have enabled him to shine in the professional or political world. But that he was a human progress and a building of a permanent, advancing Christian civilization, no one can question who knew him.

1. He was industrious—industry is a virtue. Industry is the cardinal virtue. Edward was so painstaking that he seemed incapable of leaving a task until it was thoroughly and satisfactorily done. This is a rare characteristic, but invaluable to him who has it, and one of the chief requisites to a high order of success in any field of effort.

2. He was honest. He could be trusted. His word was good. His promise could be relied upon. He would not cheat. He would not deceive. He was a man who was true in his conscientious thought as his bond. Who can overestimate the value of this trait? The more I see of life the deeper and deeper I am convinced of the simple honesty. It is the one fundamental essential of genuine character. Without honesty, sincerity, no man can possibly be a leader.

3. He was studious. In spite of the huge hindrances that constantly confronted him, he determined to succeed in the pursuit of knowledge and the development of his mental powers. It is greatly to his credit that against such odds he was able to make such progress. He was a student until he was within a few weeks of graduation from our splendid Free Academy. There never was a time when a good education is so imperatively demanded of youth as in our own day.

4. Edward was self-sacrificing. He was not absorbed in his own personal plans and ambitions. He thought of others. He toiled and sacrificed for the welfare, comfort and happiness of others. At the early age of 21-2 years his mother was left a widow through a heart-breaking tragedy, so that his childhood was robbed of a kind father's guidance, and all too soon he was called upon to assume duties and burdens which the father would have cheerfully borne. Thus early the discipline of self-sacrifice was imposed upon him and it never seemed unduly onerous. Blessed is he who allows such an experience to have its legitimate influence in the moulding of his character.

5. Edward lived a clean, pure life. I can credibly informed that he indulged in no bad habits, no evil practices. In this he was an example worthy of imitation by all who care for the best things.

Finally Edward Chappell was a Christian. Jan. 7, 1906, I received 24 young people into Trinity Methodist church on probation. Edward was one of the first. He followed in October he was received into full membership. For something over eight years he never missed being present at Sunday school. This fact is a revelation of his faithfulness. Fidelity to every trust and to every relationship in life seemed to be his normal state. In my judgment it is impossible for us to place too much stress on this.

the consecration proper begins. The Book of the Gospels is placed upon the neck and shoulders of the elect, which signifies the burden of God's word. Next follows the imposition of hands, or sacramental symbol of the descent of the Holy Ghost, whereby the grace and powers of the episcopate are conferred. Finally, the consecrator anoints with holy chrism the head and hands of the new bishop.

The insignia of office are then presented. The crozier is given with an admonition as to the true character of a shepherd. The ring is placed on his finger as a symbol of fidelity. The Book of Gospels is taken from his shoulders and given into his hands with the commission to preach. After the kiss of peace, the mass is continued. At the offertory he receives the symbolic offerings of the sacrifice, two small loaves of bread and two small barrels of wine. The mass again continues and at the proper moment the consecrator and the bishop-elect communicate together. Then the mitre is conferred, as the helmet of salvation and the gloves are put on in memory of Jacob and the inheritance which he obtained.

The ceremony concludes with the enthronization of the elect and his imparting for the first time to the people his episcopal blessing. A final kiss of peace and the recessional.
